Killing Hogs.

Killing Hogs.

Killing bogs is a business in which the whole community is interested, and perhaps a small portion acquainted with. It is termed "butchering," and is often carried on in a butchering style, while it is a business worthy of being conducted in a decent and scientific way. I do not propose going into a long programme of telling how to catch a hog, and how to hold him, etc., but to throw out a few hints.

Do not suffer the hog to be fun over and worried by men, boys and dogs, getting his flesh and blood heated, just before killing. I believe this is one cause of meat spoiling. Sometimes we drive a hog or two to a neighbor's so as to "kill together." as it is termed, making use of the same force, same fire and other fixings; and we have known the hams and shoulders of hogs thus driven to come out a little short before the next summer was over.

Let the hog be killed with as little noise,

Let the hog be killed with as little noise, and worriment, and excitement as possible. A Jerseyman has one man to go into the pea, select his first victim, and shoot him, or with a broad-faced hammer (like a shoemaker's hammer) knock down the hog, when other men come immediately and stick, others drag out and go to scalding, and so on with a large number of hogs.

Scalding machines have become very common, and are a good institution; but everybody has not got one, and still use tubs. I like the tub, and want nothing better for ordinary times; but I want a rope and tackle, and one or two hands to help work the hog. I would not allow a hog put into water while there is a sign of life in him; but when dead, make an opening to the gambrel strings and hook in, hoist the hog and dip him head and shoulders into the scald; do not let him remain more than second or two, lest his hair "sets." hoist him and air him, and if needful dip him again and again till done; then hook into the lower jaw, and scald the hinder parts.—

I like slow scalds the best, as less likely to "set the hoir." While the hinder parts.— I like slow scalds the best, as less likely to "set the hair." While the hind parts are getting scalded, the face may be cleansed. Too little attention is generally given to cleaning the head, as also the feet, leaving the fact, the women to work over he the them for the women to worry over by the hour in some cold out kitchen. As soon as the hog is hung up and washed off, let the head be taken off and set upon a barrel or block, and regularly shaved and cleaned.

And now, while speaking of the head, I want to say how I cut up a head. I lay it on its side and take off the jowl (or lower above the eyes, but careful to run into the eye sockets, and on through, leaving the eye balls with the snout end, so that there is no further trouble with gouging the eyes out of the face piece; then, without further separating to the parts, starting between the ears, saw up and downwise, not caring to extend further down the snout than to the saw mark across the face, but clean through at the other end. Now, having done with the ears for handles. I cut them off, then take out the brains for pickling— skin the snout, and take off the flesh for scraple, and throw the nasal organs away. The faces are to be cornered. I use a saw. the faces are to be cornered. I use a saw, but never an axe, in cutting up a hog: consequently the meat is always clear of splinters and chips of bones. In "chinning a hog" to cool, I saw down the ribs instead of hacking them with a hatchet. A small eized hog hook flattened, answers very well for taking off the hoofs and toe nails of a porker—or you may use a pair of pincers.—[Germantown Telegraph.

An American officer once asked his interpreter to tell a Camanche Indian about the magnetic telegraph. The interpreter, who was a Delaware Indian, asked him as follows:

"What you call that magnetic telegraph?"
"You have heard of New York and New Orleans?" said the officer.

"Oh, yes," was the reply.
"Very well; we have a wire connecting these two cities, which are about a thousand miles apart, and it would take a man thirty days to ride it upon a good horse. Now a man stands at one end of this wire in New York, and by touching it a few times, he inquires of his friend in New Orleans what he had for breakfast. His friend in New Orleans touches the other end of the wire, and in ten minutes the answer comes back —'Ham and eggs.' Tell him that Beaver."

His countenance assumed a most comical expression, but he made no remark, until the officer again asked him to repeat what he had said to the Camanche, when he said:
"No, Captain, I will not tell him that, for I don't believe that myself."

Upon the officer assuring him that such was the fact, and that he had seen it himself, he said:

—An instance is given by a correspondent of the way in which patriotic ladies helped to pile up Republican majorities. A woman living in the township of Spencer, Kent County, Michigan, went about two miles to her sister's on election morning.—Her first remark was: "John won't vote the copperhead the ket to day, for I have left him to take care of the children, and he can't leave them until I return, and I shall not do so until the pells are closed." Greeley, if says, has committed political harikari, by his general amnesty manifesto, which it styles weak and inexpedient. It says he "prattles with more than infantile glibness and guilelessness."

-In view of the probable restriction by Congress of the President's power to pardon rebels indiscriminately, some of the Southern journals are urging him to make haste and pardon everybody before the bill now pending becomes a law, and for the same reason pardon brokers at Washington are said to be playing their vocation with more vigor and energy than ever.

The Philadelphia Press compares the President with King James II., and thus quotes Macaulay in illustration: "His mode of arguing, if it is to be so called, was one not uncommon among dull and stubborn persons, who were accustomed to be surrounded by their inferiors. He asserted a proposition; and as often as wiser people ventured respectfully to show that it was erroneous, he asserted it again, in exactly the same words, and conceived that by doing so, he at once disposed of all objections."
